SIRCH impact reverberates through community

Community services organization celebrating 30 year anniversary

JENN WATT
County Life Editor

Gena Robertson could name any of the dozens of programs launched in Haliburton County as the highlights of three decades of SIRCH Community Services. She could hold up the millions of dollars invested in the local economy in that time. But what she said makes her most proud on SIRCH's 30th anniversary is the ripple effects the organization has created.

"I meet people who had a parent support worker 30 years ago and it changed their life. I meet people whose kids went to School's Cool and are now in college and they remember School's Cool. Those kinds of things," said the executive director in an interview last week. "... you want to make a difference and a positive difference and show people, or help people realize how the skills that they do have, and the potential that they have … is important. I would say for me it's more about that than it is about a particular program."

SIRCH, founded in 1989, has launched and fostered so many initiatives that it's likely no two people see the charity the same way. It started with the Social Action Committee, formed locally to help fill service gaps at a time when there were very few organizations available to do so. The committee started with Parent Support Services, which Robertson led on a five-year contract.

Since then, the organization has adapted to meet the needs of county residents, starting a women's shelter, counselling services, hospice care, programming for pregnant women and new moms and parents with young children, food initiatives, school readiness sessions, awareness campaigns, skills training programs, and social enterprises.

Jay McIvor of SIRCH Community Services pulls out some butter chicken and roast tandoori vegetables on the first day of Cook It Up last year in this file photo. Cook It Up is one of many programs SIRCH runs in Haliburton County, many of which are geared to skills training, poverty reduction and community building. /DARREN LUM Staff

Some programs are still under the SIRCH banner, others have been divested or have transformed with new organizations at the helm.

Today, SIRCH runs Family Roots genealogy program, Community Action Program for Children, Canada Prenatal Nutrition Program, School's Cool, Community Kitchen, Lunch Is On Us, Cook It Up training, Ready For Retail, Thrift Warehouse (in Haliburton and Bancroft), Repair Cafe and Catering For A Cause.

Much of the work done addresses community economic development and poverty reduction, from improving the lives of children and preparing nutritious food to workforce training and providing goods at low costs through the Thrift Warehouse and Repair Cafe.

Thrift Warehouse and Catering For A Cause are both social enterprises, meaning they offer something to the consumer, while also generating money for the charity.

"The nice thing about both Thrift Warehouse and Catering For A Cause, is it's not just a social enterprise to raise money, it also provides training and opportunities for employment, which goes back into the social determinants of health and how you do poverty reduction in a responsible way," Robertson said. "We don't just want to feed people, we want to give them skills and confidence and opportunities to give back to their community however they can."

Barbara Fawcett said she decided to join the board almost nine years ago because it allowed her to help the community.

"I looked at the volunteers with SIRCH and how dedicated they were and how the organization looked to fill in the gaps. … SIRCH has always been that group that has looked outside of the box and said maybe we could help here or there," said Fawcett, who has been president of the board for seven years.

Fawcett said she's seen first-hand the benefit the work skills training has played.

"I know a person who has been through several of our programs and who had been living on Ontario Works, or what we used to call welfare, who has basically a full-time job now. And that's a direct result of the training that we've provided in … both the Cook It Up as well as the Ready For Retail [programs] and [she] found her niche in retail," she said.

"I think we touch hundreds, but probably more like thousands every year, but even if there's only one good-news story out of the organization, then we've done what we're here to do, which is to provide for the needs of the community," she said.

To mark their 30th anniversary, SIRCH is having an informal celebration at the Community Room, part of the Haliburton Community Funeral Home, 13523 Highway 118, outside of Haliburton on Thursday, Oct. 17 from 4 to 8 p.m., presentations at 6 p.m. Mike Jaycock will be master of ceremonies. Anyone involved with the organization either as a participant, client, volunteer, staff member or supporter is welcome to attend. Find more details at www.sirch.on.ca/anniversary or call 705-457-1742.

Share the warmth by donating winter clothing

The cooler weather is a reminder that winter is just around the corner. Winters in Haliburton County can be long and cold. Having the right winter gear can make it much more bearable.

The fourth annual Share the Warmth winter clothing drive kicks off on Oct. 10. An initiative of SIRCH Community Services, Share the Warmth helps families and seniors stay warm by distributing free winter coats and winter wear.

To contribute to Share the Warmth, you may donate clean, gently used winter clothing items – clean coats, snow pants, mitts, hats, winter boots, socks, and slippers – between Oct. 10 to 22, at drop-off locations throughout the county.

In Haliburton, the drop-off locations are Algonquin Outfitters (218 Highland St), Haliburton Foodland (188 Highland St), SIRCH Community Services (49 Maple Avenue, second floor), and Todd's Independent (5121 County Rd 21).

In Minden, the drop-off locations are Dollo's Foodland (12325 Hwy 35), Easton's ValuMart (12646 Hwy 35), and St. Paul's Anglican Church (19 Invergordon Ave).

"We're grateful for the local businesses and organizations who support this annual winter clothing drive," said Margee Shelly, program co-ordinator at SIRCH Community Services. "We're especially grateful to all the members of the community who generously donate their gently worn winter jackets to help others in the county."

If you are in need of a winter coat or other winter clothing, you may attend one of two Give Away Days. There will also be coffee and hot chocolate available. All winter wear items are free of charge.

The first Give Away Day is Thursday, Oct. 24, from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m., at St. Paul's Anglican Church (19 Invergordon Ave, Minden).

The second Give Away Day is Saturday, Oct. 26, from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m., at SIRCH Central, 2 Victoria Street, Haliburton.

"Share the Warmth is a way for us to help our neighbours stay warm this winter," explained Margee. "The generous donations of clean coats, snow pants, and other winter clothing can make a huge difference in a person's life during the long winter in the Highlands."

New author featured at Friends' gala

EARLIER THIS month Bessie Sullivan wrote about Drew Hayden Taylor who was scheduled to be our Friends of the Library gala author this year. Unfortunately, he is no longer able to join us because of an unforeseen scheduling conflict. However, the Friends have invited author Barbara Fradkin to be this year's gala guest – and she has graciously accepted!

The Friends of the Haliburton County Public Library's 14th annual Gala and Silent Auction is the Friends' biggest fundraiser of the year. The money from the gala goes to purchasing many things you may recognize – extra copies of e-books, the Evergreen Award nominee titles, large print books, as well as technology for our programs. There are more pressures on the library budget than ever before, and fundraising events, like the Friends' Gala, are increasingly important – a great way to support your library!

ERIN KERNOHAN-BERNING
ERIN'S EDITION

Barbara Fradkin will be our guest this year, and her most recent book Prisoners of Hope takes us to the granite shores of Georgian Bay. Aid worker Amanda Doucette is scouting locations for a charity kayaking trip for families of a poor rural Ontario community. All is not idyllic as she hopes when she and the tour guide find a woman stranded on an island, and her boss – the owner of a luxurious waterfront mansion – is found dead at his estate. The woman begs for Amanda's help, fearing she will be falsely accused of his murder. The plot thickens as Amanda discovers the wealthy murder victim was well-known locally, but far from well-liked.

Barbara Fradkin holds a PhD in clinical psychology and after a 25-year career as a child psychologist retired to concentrate on her writing. She writes three mystery series – the award-winning Inspector Green series, the more recent Amanda Doucette series, and the Cedric O'Toole series for emerging and reluctant adult readers. Her next Amanda Doucette novel is due out in 2020, and another Inspector Green novel is also in the works. Readers of Louise Penny, Kate Morton, and Robert Galbraith will like Fradkin's well-developed characters and suspenseful storylines.

The Friends' Gala is on Oct. 27 at the Pinestone and begins at 1 p.m. Master's Bookstore will be there with Fradkin's books, and there will be a book signing. The silent auction is also not to be missed – there are some great items to be found including many donations from local artists. For the third year in a row Pinestone is offering a $10 lunch special at their restaurant, Stone 21. Reserve a spot for the lunch and show your ticket to get the special. Tickets can be purchased for $25 by calling Joan at 705-457-1789. There are also tickets available at Master's Book Store along with books by Fradkin. As always, there are a limited number of tickets for the event and it has sold out in the past.

Rethink the humble pumpkin this Halloween

KATE HALL

HKPR District Health Unit

According to Statistics Canada, there are more than 2,500 farms across the country with pumpkin patches. Collectively, they produce 80,000 metric tonnes of pumpkins, with about two-thirds sold fresh to customers. Most of those, however, are never eaten. Instead, they are carved with spooky faces, lit up with candles for decoration and thrown out. I can't think of any other kind of produce that is grown in such enormous quantities, with so little of it being eating.

Although pumpkins are a largely wasted food source, they provide an opportunity for people to engage with local farming and food production, which is good. A visit to the pumpkin patch often includes a farm tour, wagon ride and trip through a corn maze. However, to those concerned about food waste – and we all should be, considering the growing issues with food insecurity as well as greenhouse gas emissions produced from agriculture and food waste in our landfills – our relationship with pumpkins could use a serious overhaul.

Many people don't seem to realize that the humble pumpkin is a nutritious and delicious food full of fibre and an excellent source of vitamin A, which helps your eyes and skin stay strong and healthy. As an antioxidant, vitamin A can also help you lower the risk of some diseases. Who knew? Although, technically a fruit, pumpkin can be cooked and eaten any way that you would enjoy other winter squash. Why not indulge in this seasonal food in the same way that you do asparagus in spring, fresh tomatoes in summer, and carrots in fall?

There are so many wonderful ways to eat pumpkin, from curried pumpkin soup to pumpkin pie or cheesecake, to muffins and smoothies. Or simply roast pumpkin and mash with butter and a bit of salt for a delicious side dish. Roasted pumpkin seeds are an excellent source of iron and are rich in protein. For more practical tips and recipes visit unlockfood.ca.

Any pumpkins used to decorate your home, that are whole and unspoiled, can be safely consumed. Pumpkins that have been carved as jack-o-lanterns should NOT be eaten as they have been exposed to air and bacteria for days, as well as candle wax and smoke. These should be broken up and composted.

Let's create some new traditions this Halloween – don't just decorate with pumpkins, eat them!

What do you believe?

KATE BUTLER
Special to County Life

For early settlers in Haliburton County, watching the nights draw in and the seasons change meant an adjustment in the rhythm of their daily lives. Outdoor work was wrapped up by sunset and the nip in the air brought people inside, but what to do to occupy an evening decades before Netflix? Whatever chores could still be accomplished were embarked upon, but with those tasks would come the sharing of stories and on a dark evening among the shadows cast by a few small lamps, those tales might have touched on local mysteries.

For instance, what happened to Mrs. Hunter who went for a walk from her daughter and son-in-law's home near Eagle Lake in the late 19th century and never was seen again? Theories also abounded as to what happened to Jack Laking in 1917. Given the task of delivering a season's pay to the workers of the Laking Lumber Company's camp on Drag Lake, he and his assistant, Lee Lindsay, had vanished mysteriously on Drag Lake and were never seen again. As the evenings wore on, conversations might have eventually turned to more ghostly happenings…

At the Haliburton Highlands Museum, we're often asked if our buildings are haunted. It's a question commonly asked of museums, as museums are the repositories of the collective and individual memories of our communities. A few years ago though, one of the people who asked me was an author by the name of Andrew Hind. I told him about a few experiences that visitors had shared with me about unusual things they'd experienced. These included a recent account from a very young child of seeing another little boy in one of our historic houses when there were no other children in the building.

Shortly thereafter, we were featured in Andrew's book, Haunted Museums and Art Galleries of Ontario and I was amazed at how many narratives he'd collected about our buildings. So many so, in fact, that he felt he should put me in touch with the amazing team at Wellington County Paranormal Investigations.

Last month, they paid us a visit and collected hours and hours of footage and audio recordings, as well as reams of data, which they're currently analyzing. They're coming back this month as part of our local Hali Halloween celebrations to share what they discovered at the museum, as well as other accounts from the field.

Have you ever wanted to find out more about how a paranormal investigation is done and the kind of equipment that's used? Perhaps try it out for yourself? Join us on Sunday, Oct. 27 at 7 p.m. to meet the team from Wellington County Paranormal Investigations, as well as author Andrew Hind. Tickets are just $10 ($5 for kids under 13) and can be purchased at the door.

In the meantime, check out www.halihalloween.com for details of all the other fantastic events we have planned, including a movie night, Halloween trivia, an all-ages Halloween parade and of course, a ghost walk through Haliburton Village where we'll share more tales of unusual local happenings. Make sure to join us and get in the spirit of the season!

Could the buildings at the Haliburton Highlands Museum be haunted? Join the Wellington County Paranormal Investigations team on Oct. 27 as they share their discoveries from hours of footage and audio recordings captured while on site. /File photo

Top 10 reasons catapults are still useful

YOU MIGHT have noticed that catapults have fallen out of fashion recently. That's not just hard on the catapult manufacturers, it also hurts the consumer. With that in mind, here are 10 reasons why you should consider buying one.

1. Snowball fight season is coming soon.
2. Takes the muss and fuss out of getting rid of old pumpkins.
3. With the right trajectory you never have to visit the dump again.
4. To protect your moat.
5. No better gift for that guy who always sings, "I believe I can fly."
6. Saves everyone from throwing rice at the wedding.
7. Nuisance bears.
8. Less expensive than a bridge
9. Stops a jazz festival cold.

FOREST

Haunches of hills bristling beneath iron Sky, as Wind seizes leaves from their trees,
dripping copper and bronze onto the forest floor.
The husk of day curling into dusk, earth seeping deeper into itself, as I wade through puddles of leaves, inhaling the smell of their decay, wondering whether I am lost, an interloper amongst this tribe of trees, trespassing across their ancient terrain, this trail that I stumbled onto,
as I veered off the road,
drowned by leaves, almost three hours ago.
I meander around the trunks of birches and maples,
seeking guidance from their leaves,
that tremble above me,
listening to every crackle, every step,
as my feet trip over root, sink into a hidden puddle of mud, pausing to listen to the cackle of crows, cawing somewhere in the branches above me, wondering whether their wings ever get lost,
flapping through the endlessness of Sky.
My feet wander over towards a boulder, resting between two trunks of trees, my eyes gaping up at the burliness of one of their limbs, still sprouting green leaves from its crown, its twin limb, severed, jutting out of its trunk, jagged as a lightning bolt.
The contrast between the two limbs, jolts me, as I clamber onto the shoulder of the boulder, quiet spreading all around me, soft as the moss on which I sit,
the silence splintered by the screech of a crow.
I gawk up at the gnarled tree, growing beside me, wondering how old it might be,
whether the frailty of one of its limbs belies its strength, how deep its roots must slither, intermingling with the roots of other trees, sprawling beneath the forest floor.
I finger a crack running along the flank of the boulder,
the sprig of green that sprouts from it, wondering about all the scars this forest bears, as I slink off the boulder, to wade through the puddle of leaves, forging my own ragged trail, as I zig-zag around the trunks of trees, grazing their bark, catching bronze and gold medallions of leaves, as they fall, clutching them in my hand, like talismans,
to help lead me out of the woods, towards a road I know, Sky deepening above me, earth breathing beneath my feet, as I tread across its scars, cloaked by the flesh of leaves, soothing its fresh and ancient wounds.

Hunting for food and pleasure

I AM A HUNTER so I believe that wild animals are a sustainable resource. I also believe that animals, especially where their habitats intersect with human settlements, benefit from being managed as a resource. Yes, individual animals are killed by hunters but as a rule overall populations are protected and managed for health, stability and sustainable harvest.

STEVE GALEA

That's clearly big picture stuff though. For me, hunting has always been about food and pleasure.

The pleasure is easy to explain. It comes from spending time with trusted old friends. (I still hunt for a few days each autumn with the same guys I hunted with 43 years ago, when I first started.) The pleasure also comes from being outside in the woods in all weather, and from exploring fields, forests and marshes at prime times when animal activity is peaking. It is derived from seeing beautiful things that non-hunters will likely never see, such as flights of wood ducks cutting through the mist of an early morning marsh. It comes from learning, over the course of a hunting lifetime, the rhythms of nature, the migratory or rutting behaviour of our quarries and from seeing these wild animals at their finest and most majestic before the backdrop of unspoiled wilderness.

Pleasure comes from learning their behaviours and habits and, yes, from developing the ability to harvest an animal with firearm or bow – for that is no small achievement. But most of all there is a pride that comes from venturing afield and bringing home delicious, nutritious meat that will feed your family throughout the next few months.

For me, meat for the freezer is the culmination and greatest cause for joy. Each hunting season, hunters make efforts to stock our freezers with rabbits, squirrels, hares, ruffed grouse, woodcock, geese and ducks, wild turkey, deer, bear and moose. The result is a diversity of wild game that few but hunters experience.

Hunting was a locovore activity before anyone ever dreamed of the word. Most of the game I take is easily within 20 miles of my house, though sometimes I venture a bit further.

Hunting cements the bond between the hunter and the land. Hunters care about the woods, wetlands and waters around us. I know, others can say that too, but hunters typically put their money and efforts where their mouth is.

If you need proof, read the recent Cornell University study of bird populations across Canada and the U.S. In that study, researchers found that, since 1970, bird populations have declined 30 per cent on average across North America.

The only bright spot has been waterfowl populations, which have increased by 50 per cent in the last 50 years, thanks to the North American Waterfowl Management Plan, which has invested billions of dollars into wetlands conservation and created international collaboration, as well as the establishment of a federal no-net-loss wetlands policy.

These are programs almost completely supported by hunting licences and taxes and the conservation groups that hunters support, such as Ducks Unlimited and Delta Waterfowl.

Wild duck is excellent, but the conservation aspect to me is the gravy.

Land trust Discovery Days receives funding

The Haliburton Highlands Land Trust is excited to announce that our application for funding from TD Friends of the Environment was successful! This generous grant will fund the Land Trust Discovery Days programming, help support land stewardship on our properties, and fund special projects in 2020.

"We are excited to develop our new Land Trust Discovery Days series and are thrilled that TD funding has allowed this important program to continue in 2020," says HHLT board member Joan Duhaime.

Land Trust Discovery Days is a series of eight events held through the year designed to engage and educate people of all ages. Our programs focus on learning about specific species, land and species conservation and providing people with an understanding of the importance of land conservation in Haliburton County. Many of our events are held on HHLT properties.

TD Friends of the Environment has provided funding to HHLT for many years. The HHLT board is very grateful for this support in past years and going forward. Some TD funding in 2019 was used to work towards the opening of Barnum Creek Nature Reserve. That funding supported trail mapping, kiosk construction and the creation of a Barnum Creek brochure. TD has also funded new interpretive signage which you will soon find at Dahl Forest.

Please look for our first Land Trust Discovery Days event early in 2020. You will find information and event registrations posted on our website towards the end of the year: www.haliburtonlandtrust.ca.

Harrison named warden

Longtime Stanhope politician uncontested in bid for Haliburton County's top job

by Jerry Grozelle

Algonquin Highlands reeve Eleanor Harrison will serve as warden of Haliburton County for the next year. Harrison was elected to the position, uncontested, at the inaugural meeting on December 10 at the county office.

A group of local politicians, family, friends and community leaders attended the ceremony to wish the new warden well in her term of office.

Eleanor Harrison

Outgoing warden and reeve of Dysart et al Murray Fearrey nominated Harrison and the nomination was seconded by Harrison's deputy-reeve Don Shortreed.

She thanked her two colleagues for their confidence in nominating her and acknowledged the importance of Shortreed's support.

"Without Don's support, it would be difficult to even consider the position of warden," Harrison said. "I would also like to thank the remainder of county council for allowing me the privilege of serving as your warden for the year 2002."

Harrison noted that 2001 has been her 10th year as a county councillor. "I am hopeful the knowledge and experience gained in those 10 years will enable me to perform the warden duties and make me an excellent ambassador for Haliburton County," she said. I know the position requires a great deal of time and energy and with the encouragement I have received from my family and, in particular, my husband, I am prepared to donate as much time as the position requires."

Harrison said warden Fearrey, with the assistance of county council members, set up a three-year course to follow at the beginning of 2001. "It is my intention to keep us on course," she said. "The 9-1-1 project is extremely important to all of us and we must assure our constituents that we will continue this valuable project and, hopefully, meet all our many deadlines."

The new warden said it has come to light over the past few months that several of the county's non-profit agencies are having some financial difficulties and are looking for the county to provide some assistance.

"Many hundreds of volunteers give many hundreds of hours of their time each year to help to make our community, the community of Haliburton County, a great place to live, work and play and it is these many volunteers who make up the non-profit agencies. They indicate they need assistance from Haliburton County to survive. However, in my opinion, Haliburton County needs these agencies and those many volunteers in order to survive."

Kindergarten students at Archie Stouffer Elementary School have been working on a sweet project leading up to the Christmas holidays. Families were invited to help their youngsters build gingerbread houses and Grade 6 Kinderbuddies were more than happy to help the kids in Toss Reid's class.

Road salt alternative good for what ale's ya!

by Allison Taylor

Ever heard of using beer to de-ice the roads? It could be happening on a highway near you in the future.

The Algonquin Highlands Public Works Department has taken the initiative to do a little research of its own — no, they're not taste-testing the hops and barley. The department is investigating the use of a by-product of the popular bar beverage as an environmentally friendly alternative to salt, in the battle against miserable winter ice.

This product is currently being used in Grey County, the snow-belt region of Georgian Bay.

Public Works Superintendent, Brian Whetstone told the members of the Algonquin Highlands council at the meeting on December 6, that his department has been experimenting with a product known by the trade
